Don Garcia of Navarre, or The Jealous Prince, is a Jacobean revenge tragedy written by John Fletcher and first performed in 1622. The play tells the story of Don Garcia, a young prince who is consumed by jealousy and ultimately driven to madness and violence. Don Garcia is a complex and tragic character, and the play explores the destructive power of jealousy and the dangers of unchecked ambition.

Character Analysis

Don Garcia

Don Garcia is the protagonist of the play and a complex and tragic character. He is a young prince who is intelligent, ambitious, and passionate. However, he is also consumed by jealousy, which ultimately leads to his downfall. Don Garcia is a victim of his own emotions, and he is unable to control his destructive impulses.

Marcelia

Marcelia is the love interest of Don Garcia and a beautiful and virtuous woman. She is kind, compassionate, and intelligent. However, she is also torn between her love for Don Garcia and her loyalty to her husband, Duke Alphonso. Marcelia is a strong and independent woman, but she is ultimately unable to escape the tragic fate that befalls her.

Duke Alphonso

Duke Alphonso is the husband of Marcelia and the rightful king of Navarre. He is a wise and just ruler, but he is also a suspicious and jealous man. Duke Alphonso is suspicious of Don Garcia's intentions towards Marcelia, and his jealousy ultimately leads to the tragic events of the play.

Plot Summary

The play begins with Don Garcia returning to Navarre after a long absence. He is immediately struck by the beauty of Marcelia, the wife of Duke Alphonso. Don Garcia falls deeply in love with Marcelia, and he is consumed by jealousy of Duke Alphonso. Don Garcia's jealousy drives him to madness, and he begins to plot against Duke Alphonso.

Don Garcia's plot is discovered, and he is arrested and imprisoned. However, he escapes from prison and confronts Duke Alphonso in a duel. In the duel, Don Garcia is defeated and killed. Marcelia is killed by her husband in the aftermath of the duel.
